Why I Am Attending College

As I am the first in my family to attend college, I am very thankful to have come thus far. I am looking forward into advancing and challenging myself to learn and become better at the skills I do. The decision to go to college was a good one to make, but there was a lot of contemplating where to go and what degree to pursue. College is an important next step in my life to extend my learning experiences and advance myself in my chosen career path.

I had to decide where to attend college at. With so many options, my decision was hard to come by. I made the decision long before that I wanted to stay near home, so my choices were very limited. I narrowed my choices down to either East Tennessee State University and Northeast State Technical Community College. I discussed with friends on what their plans were for college. I had heard from many people that ETSU had a very good information technology program, yet I already had a short amount of credit hours established at Northeast State. After reaching a conclusion, I applied to ETSU and was accepted.

Many factors contributed into my decision of attending college. I want to be financially secure whenever I am older. Many studies show that people with a college degree make more money in their lifetime than non-graduates. It has also been shown that a person with a college degree is more likely to be hired for the job than a person with only a high school diploma. This is essential for me because of the competitive field of information technology. I not only want to obtain a well paying job, but I want to secure my position within the company. I also want to be able to have a job in which I am interested in the work I am performing.

The primary reason I want to attend college was to be able to learn. In the fast paced world of information technology, there is always something new to learn, no matter how much one may already know. I also enjoy learning about the world in general. In learning about different subjects, one can learn about oneself. I like exploring new ideas and concepts. The great philosopher Socrates once said, "The unexamined life is not worth living."

College is the next step for me. It is important so that I may advance in my chosen field as well as to challenge myself. Though my choices were broad, I was able to make a decision to meet my needs. My choice of going to college will not be one that I will regret.
