

Not placing top 10 in Cisco System Administration at BPA nationals

1. Disappointment
2. Cisco test is coming up, so I should study more
3. Confident going in
4. Anxious to get results back

I felt confident going into the test because I had made A's and B's on my Cisco tests that I took in class. I knew that in the class, we had not covered all the material that was going to be on the test, so I studied the remaining material and reviewed the previous material so that I could place top ten. When I went to take the test, I felt confident as I answered most of the questions. Some questions were concerning the material I had yet to officially do in class, and I became confused. After taking the test, I was anxious to go to the awards ceremony where the top ten was announced. When the awards ceremony came around and it was time for my test to be announced, I was excited and hoping that my name was going to be called. When the first place winner was announced, I knew that I had blew it. I had studied so frivolously for such a long period of time, yet it still was not good enough to place in the top ten. I was disappointed in myself and felt I had let the school down. After stepping back at the situation, I realized that I could come away with something learned. My actual Cisco exam was coming within a week and by taking the test at nationals, I knew that I seriously needed to studied. After heeding my advice, I studied furiously for the exam. When it came time to take it, I almost made a perfect score, which is something not easily done.
